

10 Tips on How to Increase your Bench Press

- Learn Proper form/ technique before loading the bar with heavy weights or testing a 1 rep max. Do not waste time doing pointless one rep maxes that are too heavy and you have a spotter who is doing the work. It is pointless. You need to move the weights not them.
- Slow down the control of the eccentric (downward towards chest) portion of the reps. 1-2 seconds of control over the weight then explode up.
- Focus on progressive overload in the rep ranges of 3-5, and 5-12 reps. Meaning each week you would work towards lifting heavier weights in those set rep ranges.
  A hard 3 rep set with 225 lbs will build much more muscle than a 1 rep set of 240 that is ugly.
- Make sure you are eating enough to gain strength, make sure you eat before and after workouts. High Carbs before training for energy and High protein after training for recovery.
- Focus on pause reps, bring the bar down slowly towards your chest, pause on the chest for a 2 second count, explode up. I would recommend doing sets of 3-6 reps on these and always push for more weight over time but using good form.
- Do dumbbell work, do flat dumbbell presses and incline dumbbell presses, this will strengthen each arm individually and carry over to the bench press.

 Put a good amount of work into training triceps: Rope push downs, dips, close grip bench, skull crushers etc. Strengthen those triceps for a more powerful bench, and stronger lockout.

 Only spend about one hour to hour and half in the gym, and only bench press twice a week. More than that frequency you most likely won't progress. Monday / Thursday